Local Matters.

First National Bank report this week.

Public installation of the sons of Temperance next Tuesday night.

Sergeant Finley's instructive article for this week is on the inside pages, read it carefully and note.

"Normal Boys of '83." is the inscription on the gold headed cane received by Prof. Bellows.

We shall take occasion to give from time to time telling quotations from Mr. Willits Inaugural address.

Prof. Bellows lays the corner stone of the Charlotte court house the 4th, with Masonic ceremonies.

DON'T FORGET—That Dr. T. Y. Kayne is to be at the Hawkins house July 3d. Egan's Imperial Truss takes the premium.

Consumated. The estate of Wm. H. Philips have sold residence and lot north of the mineral well property for $4000 to Geo. Moorman.

The last week may be characterized by rain and cloud and cold. Discouraging June. Our hopes, our fears are centred on July and August.

It would be a long list to enumerate Ypsilanti teachers who have returned to their homes to spend vacation, mainly young ladies.

We have an interesting letter from Prof. Osband, Columbia, Dokota. Press of local school commencement matters crowd it out until next week.

Geo. A. Neat's advertisement is out for a freso start in next week. We give him a brief breathing spell, but his customers don't seem to be as merciful.

The Ypsilanti Base Ball Club played here with the Plymouths Thursday and were given away as they believe. They renenw the game at Plymouth on the 4th.

We are indebted to Friend B. F. Foster for a basket of the finest and largest specimens of strawberries we have yet seen. He has plenty more of the same sort.

We regretted that a larger number of our citizens could not hear Ex-Gov. St. John especially our young men. It would have given them a nobler sense of true manhood.

Friday morning the clerks playing ball on Congress St., knocked it way over this way and like every business man's messenger it entered the door of the COMMERCIAL office.

Unclaimed Letters June 28th. Irwin Alford, F. E. Bradchamp, Mrs. Frank Brown, Geo. Churchill, Frank Dickinson, Addie Erwin, John McGrath, Mrs. R. M. Moore, C. W. Stevens.

Mr. Godkin, who with his family have had such a serious time on account of sickness, has recovered and on hand to attend to his old and new customers. Grocery stand in Bucklin block opposite postoffice.

This year Ypsilanti scatters. Some in quiet nooks at home. Some take in Bellville and Milan, and others go to Detroit and sail on the river. But next year July 1884, Ypsilanti will show her neighbors a thing or two.

The post offices in the county are given on the page next to the preface of the county directory and the town and locality of each, a very great convenience. The same is also found in the description of each township.

The Sons of Temperance will give a public Installation at their hall over Hall's harness shop, Congress St. West, on Tuesday evening July 3d. They will also give a strawberry and ice cream social which all are cordially invited to attend. A special invitation is extended to editors and their ladies.

Mr. Geo. H. Gilmore painted our office The brick work is done by what is termed "Milk paint." It is a very pretty color and faithfully done. The front and wood work in oil paint, a handsome job. It got Mr. Gilmore the job of painting I. N Conklin's residence. Now Artist Amsden come to time and come quickly and do the lettering work

A. C. Wendell's County Directory gives Ann Arbor City in 1878, a population of 8,136. In 1883, 10,455, an increase of 2,319. This city in 1868, 4,803. In 1883, 6,575, an increase of 1,572. This is a low estimate, multiplying the names in the directory of a city by 3. At the east 3½ to 4 is a ratio. So we are safe in affirming a population of over 6000.

Prof. Bellows new series of Algebra, a copy of which we have glanced at in the book store is neatly printed on plates, and yet the Commercial office don't take a back seat on this kind of printing and the Prof. says we don't need to. From a casual review we know that it is worthy the high reputation already achieved by the head of mathematics in the State Normal School.

"Corn Cob Jim," is about to get a patent of a clothes line, the advantages of which can easily be seen. By a hinge in the post the line can be lowered to a convenient height and raised again so as to be out of the way. It is cheap and effective. Will be manufactured in this city. The idea was formed Monday, the model completed Tnesday afternoon and several orders Wednesday.

THE HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT, FRIDAY EVE., JUNE 22.

The following is the program: Chorus, "Glory be to the Lord forever," (from Farmer's Mass); prayer by Rev. Mr. McLain; music; essay, "Is faith dead?" by Nellie Costello; essay, "Ballads," by Kittie Cross; essay, "Interrogation Points," by Mary E. Lord; music; essay, "Reputation and Character," by Lutie M. Densmore; essay, "The Vortex Atom Theory," by Nellie A. Jarvis; class poem, "A Comparison," Zell L. Baldwin; Class History, by Clara E. Lord; music; Class Prophecy, by Anna L. Judd; oration, "The Monroe Doctrine," by Joseph B. McMahon; Valedictory, by Ella Cady; conferring of diplomas by the superintendent; chorus, "Praise the Lord, O My Soul" (L. O. Emerson); benediction by Rev. I. N. Elwood.

The hall was nicely decorated with evergreens, and in the rear of the stage in bold relief the apt, choice motto: "Thus endeth our first lesson." Essays and speeches seemed to be infused with the spirit of the motto, that graduation is only the beginning of a big contest for supremacy over obstacles that in every direction and in multiplied forms will oppose their progress and success in life. This is the genuine spirit of humility that insures success.

Superintendent Putnam feelingly and impressively referred to the motto. His remarks were brief but pertinent. He regarded this class as the first-fruits of years of toil on his and their part. In a peculiar sense he regarded them as his children, being the first graduates whose entire course had been pursued under his administration.

The music by Prof. Foote and his pupils, with Prof. Hewitt at the piano, was in full harmony with the inspiration of the occasion.

We shall expect this class—as the "first-fruits" of the high school principal—each one to plant themselves on a broad and solid basis; place themselves in harmony with the good forces of society and move onward to noble and high-minded results.

RALPH W. VAN FOSSEN.

The death of Ralph W. VanFossen at Pontiac calls to our remembrance our first acquaintance in the spring of 1864. Mr. VanFossen was a fine appearing man possessing a natural love of refinement and culture. He was then post-master and an earnest, enthusiastic and working republican. He was one of the leaders of the Union League. His removal from the post-office upon which he dwelt day and night unremittingly, gradually unsettled his mind. It was claimed that his mental powers were already shaken and the post office department a sufferer. Nothing to our knowledge was ever alleged against his integrity and honest endeavors to perform faithfully the duties of his office. We sincerely drop a tear to his memory and his family now as always have our sympathy in their great affliction for so many years, culminating in the grave, the final rest of earth's sorrows. We would fain believe that Ralph W. VanFossen, while in his sound mind a regular attendant and worshiper of St. Luke's church, has gone up higher to the home of the blessed.

AN OPEN CHALLENGE.

As we the Gale Sulky Harrow Manfg. Co. of Detroit have been falsely misrepresented in this community by a dealer, one Burroughs. He causing to be published in the Eaton Rapids paper that on the eighteenth of this month that in a trial between the Whipple and Gale harrows at Ypsilanti that the Whipple was acknowledged by all present to be far the best harrow. We hereby challenge him to meet us in a contest one and one-fourth miles east and two and one-half miles north on the farm of Wm. Gotts in the town of Superior at 1.30 p. m. July 7th 1883. A committee of five will be chosen from the farmers present as judges. The points to be considered will be ease of handling, ease of draft, manner of construction, durability, and quality of work.

GALE SULKY HARROW CO.

EX-GOV. ST. JOHN AT THE OPERA HOUSE.

The evening of Saturday was a bad one to draw a house, but the address was all that was promised by the Press and the pulpit. It showed in striking contrast Michigan as a tax, license state and Kansas a prohibition state. Kansas has only tried Prohibition two years and yet her 1900 dram shops have been reduced to 700. Not a dramshop, disttilery or brewery in sixty-seven out of eighty-one counties of the state. Kansas has had great difficulties to overcome, Missouri on her eastern border. The only support is from the Cherokee Indians on the southwest. They are prohibitory to the core. It is not claimed that prohibition is complete. It is repression of the traffic. The law against murder and theft does not prohibit, but represses these great crimes. But the tax law in Michigan does not even repress. There are 5,500 dram shops in Michigan, with a population of only 600,000 greater than Kansas. He was beaten for governor, but the prohibitory law still stands. The liquor power of the nation expending $100,000 concentrated their efforts to defeat him. The legislature was largely republican and seven prohibitionists were elected to congress and all the balance of the state ticket. The dram sellers had gone into Missouri, but a hundred thousand of the best people that ever settled a new country and many from Michigan have come in to take their places. He made it hot for the parties endeavoring to dodge the question of prohibition, and predicted that their doom would be the same as that of the defenders of slavery.

He paid a handsome compliment to Gov. Begole, who is a fearless prohibitionist, sitting on the platform and endorsing his speech at Flint before an audience of 1500 persons.

THE KNIGHT TEMPLARS.

The Ann Arbor Commandery No. 13 Knight Templars of St. John made our city a visit Monday St. John's day and were gallantry received by the members here. The religious exercises were held at St. Luke's church. Rev. Mr. McLain preached an able sermon, presenting the cross of Christ and his crucifixion as an attonment for sin, the central truth of christianity. That Knighthood was not called upon to fight for the sepulchre now, but to stand as a defence for the great central truths of christianity. It is not a substitute and cannot be of the church. The church in its organized capacity is for higher ends, the salvation of men. The Knights Templars, externally clad in armor and equipped with the sword, are symbolic of the great fact that truth is to be manfully contended for. He exhorted every Knight to imitate the bold, manly, fearless career and yet simple life of John the Baptist. A noble Knighthood was so pure in life, such integrity of character as not to be ashamed to face any man.

There were fifty-one swords in the company present. There are in this city belonging to the Commandery twenty-three parties. Judge Harriman the eminent Commander, was present. Rev. Willis Hall, Ann Arbor, the prelate officiated in the reading of the Episcopal prayer book exercises. The company repaired to the Hawkins house and the members of the Commandery here, provided a lunch.

Syracuse, N. Y., Feb. 8th, 1883.

My dear Mr. Sutherland.—My wife having suffered greatly from Rheumatism, she was induced to try your Rheumatine. After taking only two bottles she was completely cured of Rheumatism, and her general health greatly improved.

I also took three bottles of Rheumatine with the result that I now find my Rheumatism entirely gone, and a very marked improvement in my general health. I consider Rheumatine a first class remedy for Rheumatism and all affections of the kidneys.

She was failing so fast her condition became alarming. Having noticed your advertisment I immediately purchased a bottle of your "Worm Destroyer." A few doses improved her health and a few more has restored her to her naturally healthy condition. All symptoms of spasms have disappeared, I should feel unsafe without the medicine in the house. BURNED TO DEATH.

Forty-Seven Out of an Audience of Only Ninety Perish in a Burning Theater at Dervio, Italy.

LONDON, June 26.

The intelligence of a frightful calamity at a place of amusement in Dervio, on the shore of Lake Como, has just been received. While a performance was in progress at a puppet theater the structure took fire and was entirely destroyed. Forty-seven persons lost their lives and twelve others were injured.

The performance was given in a small hall over a tavern. Ninety men, women and children composed the audience. A Bengal light was used to represent fire. Sparks from this ignited a quantity of straw and fire-wood in the adjacent room.

On perceiving the flames the showman shouted "fire," but the spectators thought the cry was merely a realistic detail of the show, and remained seated. Cries of fire were soon raised outside the hall. The audience, thinking an affray had arisen in the street, barred the door leading from the hall. They did not discover their mistake until the flames burst into the room. After the fire had been extinguished, forty-seven charred corpses were found near the table, including the bodies of the showman and his wife. The greater number of the remains are those of women and children. The wounded were hurt by leaping through windows. A child was flung out of a window by its mother, and fell upon a pile of straw. This is the only one present in the hall not hurt.

Dervio is a charming little village on the borders of Lake Como, very sequestered and picturesque. It is about six miles north of Ballagio, a charming seaside resort much frequented by English and American tourists, and about thirty miles north of Como.

Exploded Fire-works.

JACKSONVILLE, Ill., June 26.

At four o'clock Saturday an explosion of fire-works occurred in Lou A. McDonald's store and set fire to the building. Lou A. McDonald and Leonard G. Lott were stifled by the smoke. McDonald was rescued by citizens, but Lott was suffocated and died as he was being taken out on the roof by the firemen. A. N. McDonald, father of the proprietor, escaped from a rear second-story window, but was also seriously hurt. As the fire was on the square a whole block of prominent business houses were endangered, and there was much excitement, thousands of citizens turning out. A Coroner's inquest was held over Lott's remains, and returned a verdict in accordance with the facts. The loss on McDonald's stock is about $1,000, and on the building about $500.

Large Cattle Purchase.

LEXINGTON, Ky., June 26.

Probably the biggest cattle transaction of the age is the purchase just concluded in this section by R. E. Edmondson of 1,100 high grade and short-horn bulls for the improvement of the 100,000 Texas cattle on the half million tract of the Franklin Land and Cattle Company, located in the Texas Panhandle. The company is an English syndicate, associated with B. B. Groom & Son, late of this locality. Fifty-four head of Jersey cattle imported by Alexander McClintock & Son, of Millersburg, direct from the Island of Jersey, arrived in fair condition, considering their voyage.

Oh, My Back!

That's a common expression and has a world of meaning. How much suffering is summed up in it.

The singular thing about it is, that pain in the back is occasioned by so many things. May be caused by kidney disease, liver complaint, consumption, cold, rheumatism, dyspepsia, overwork, nervous debility, &c.

Whatever the cause, don't neglect it. Something is wrong and needs prompt attention. No medicine has yet been discovered that will so quickly and surely cure such diseases as BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, and it does this by commencing at the foundation, and making the blood pure and rich.

Wm. P. Marshall, of Logansport, Indiana, writes: "My wife has for many years been troubled from pain in her back and general debility incident to her sex. She has taken one bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters, and I can truthfully say that she has been so much benefited that she pronounces it the only remedy of many medicines she has tried."

Leading physicians and clergymen use and recommend BROWN'S IRON BITTERS. It has cured others suffering as you are, and it will cure you.

Normal School,

1882-3.

The examinations are reported as developing close and severe study and good attainment in all the departments. There never has been more enthusiasm and greater pride in the breast of every teacher, from the principal down, to show good work. While the year has been one of great activity and solid attainment, the whole machinery has moved along with gratifying smoothness. If there has been a particle of friction we have failed to learn about it. The acting principal, Prof. Daniel Putnam, has in his own person demonstrated the good and apt leadership he so truly described in his response to the after-dinner toast assigned him. While giving wide latitude to the faculty, full scope to develop the best possible results in their departments and yet each acting in full harmony with the headship, co-operating for the most valuable results.

We never felt prouder, not simply of the structural pile which we show our readers at the head of this article, but of the profound scholarship which has given the faculty favor at home and abroad. The progress made in every department of the school and the high standard of morality identifies this great institution of learning with the best and most effective agencies for good in our great and growing commonwealth.

The Commencement Days, for the first time in our memory, were gloomy. But it did not deter a vast assemblage from attending. We noticed this time a liberal sprinkling of our business men. The essays and orations were without exception choice, and held well the audience. That was a motto worthy to be emblazoned on the door of every school-room, in the oration of Mr. Wm. H. Brooks: "If we teach and fail to train we may despair of the result." It expressed the bottom aim of the Normal to send out well trained teachers. Those who can train, mould direct and discipline as well as teach.

The culminating interest centered in the inaugural address of the principal elect, Hon. Edwin Willits. His address surpassed even the high expectations of friends. It was a solid beginning. In a few extempore remarks in reply to the neat introduction given him by the President of the Board, Hon. George F. Edwards, a former citizen of this place and teacher in our seminary, now of Niles, he disclaimed entertaining any theory or design of introducing experiments or innovations. He would brook no experiments with his child. The keynote of his address was that education not including religion and morality is and must be a dead failure. The fathers were wise in this regard in their enunciation of their importance in the ordinance of 1787, and the present generation will do well to make good use of the legacy. "In every age the best policeman is a well regulated conscience." "Liberty stands in need of character." He showed from the census that it was not the ignorant black man that we need dread, for he takes kindly to education, but the ignorant white man, who is spiced with prejudice. He demonstrated the necessity of government seeing to the education of the masses.

Prof Putnam gave a few earnest parting words to the graduating class.

The music was in the highest state of the art—instrumental and vocal, the same as that given in the best musical seats of Europe. It was the best we have ever listened to in this city. The Normal Choir, led by their musical director, Prof. Pease, were aided by Spiel's Detroit Opera House Orchestra. There is nothing that impresses the visitors to our Commencements more than the music, and Prof. Pease is the central figure, having earned a state and national reputation.

Forty years of a useful record is something to boast of and this the Hillsdale Standard can do.

Civil Servce reform is to be one of slow growth, its success depends largely on a careful selection of men to make it effective.

Our courts do not punish crime; our lawyers get their living by protecting criminals and encouraging them in their depredations upon society.

The star route verdict is a sorry conclusion for the interests of justice and public honesty, for the country and for the Republican party.

The revenue districts in the whole country have been reduced from 126 to 82. Only two now in this state. Collectors James H. Stone, Detroit, and Chas. W. Watkins, Grand Rapids.

The Star Route trial is ended, and the verdict is that of acquittal. Another lot of precious scamps have been turned loose with a certificate of character, and the people are left to wonder why it costs so much to run the government. In this case we have another example of the deplorable consequences of the jury system.

What a hypocritical world we live in- The following from Harper's Magazine, alas is only too true:

If a man says sonorously and decisively that honesty is the best policy, or that a lie well stuck to is, after all, not as good as the truth, he is saluted as a hypocrite and impostor and pretender, and every liar and swindler and charlatan turns upon him with a sneer, asking him why he sets himself up for a saint, and why what is good enough for others is not good enough for him.

At the meeting of leading Republicans of the state held in Detroit last week the main question at issue was to see who should boss the job next year. Each clan sent its chieftain and each chieftain had his plan for exalting his own horn. Before matters had gone very far, however, Senator Palmer took matters into his own hands, and gave the little chieftains to understand that he was the head of the party. There was practically no opposition, as indeed there could be none. Senator Palmer is the shrewdest political manager and the most popular man in the state to-day. Moreover, he has plenty of money at his command and he is not afraid to spend it. He represents the fresh blood that the party so badly needs; and if the little chieftains really have the party's good at heart, as they profess to have, they will show their wisdom by taking such places as their new chief shall assign them, and by doing their duty in those stations to which they have been called.—Every Saturday.

The fact that these party gatherings are confined to a few office holders, or a select few who are on the lookout for the loaves and fishes, is damaging. Call the republican editors into council instead of only a few, who happen to hold an office and you will learn something. Get down to bed rock facts.

The changes in the nature of diseases correspond with the seasons thusly:

For the week ending June 16, 1883, the reports indicate that intermittent fever increased, that pneumonia considerably decreased, and that erysipelas, bronchitis, cholera morbus, diarrhea, measles, inflammation of the brain, rheumatism and whooping cough decreased in area of prevalence.

Harvest Has Begun.

An Exciting Day near Lexington, Ky.—Great Contest among the Binders.

Eleven Machines Striving All Day Long for Supremacy.

The McCormick Out-Distancing All Its Rivals.

LEXINGTON, KY., June 19, 1883. (Special.)

One of the most interesting events which has occurred in this vicinity for years, was a field trial of twine binders to-day. The trial was made under the auspices of the Kentucky Agricultural and Mechanical association, on the farm of James B. Clay, three miles from this city.

The Bluegrass population was out in large numbers, the crowd being estimated at from 1,500 to 2,000.

The trial opened at 10 o'clock, and lasted until nearly 6. It was a warm contest, in which eleven machines were engaged as follows: McCormick, Minneapolis, Walter A. Wood, Champion Osborne, St. Paul, Deering Elevated and Deering Low Down. Buckeye Elevated and Buckeye Low Down. As usual, the result was a most signal triumph for the justly celebrated McCormick.

The judges selected were C. J. Cox., William Wood, Alexander Shropshire, B. T. Hume, and J. C. McClure. From the very first round it was evident that the McCormick was the favorite of the crowd.

It never missed a bundle, never choked or stopped for repairs, and its clean cutting stood out in bold comparrison with the work of other machines, besides its width of cut was eight feet, while its rivals in the contest ranged in width of cut from four and a half to six and a half feet.

The Low down Deering was a complete failure.

Much interest was manifested by the farmers in the low down machines, but their slovenly work brought condemnation upon them. The Deering, in simplifying the tying device, seemed to have carried the point of simplicity too far, as by the new invention one of the most valuable requisites has been omitted, as shown by the frequent missing of bundles. There was an attempt by its agents to bull the Osborn through, but when, owing to its heavy draft, the double-tree was broken, and when in several instances it choked, and the driver was obliged to get down from his seat and tear the grain away, the crowd cried "Take it out." The result of the days work was the SALE OF ELEVEN McCORMICK MACHINES ON THE GROUND.

The following testimonial from the shockers who followed the machines throughout the contest is the proof of the well deserved and easily-earned victory for the McCormick:

"We, the undersigned, followed the machines in the field trial near Lexington to-day, as shockers, and found the work of the McCormick, the best of any in the contest. It Did Not Miss a Bundle and tied tighter bundles than any other machine.

"A majority of the other machines threw a number of loose bundles, and several of them choked.

(Signed.) Sanford Coldwell,
Robert Taylor,
Thomas Warren,
Scippio Hayden,
Andrew Smith."

The shockers were the only persons present during the contest who were capable of judging to a certainty the tightness of the bundles, as well as of all other details, from the fact that every bnndle passed through their hands, and there is no guesswork about it.

A large number of friends was added today to the host of those who stand by the king of harvesters. Thus one by one does the McCormick link its victories until the chain reaches from continent to continent, unbroken and impregnable. No tricks nor device can ever take away its laurels.

Over 200 of these celebrated machines were sold in this county in 1882, over three times as many as all others combined. Farmers, look well to your interests. Do not buy a machine that is made in some little four corner shop that in a year or two will be out of existence. Do not buy a machine that not enough have been sold to pay any agent or company to keep a stock of repairs in your town, thereby causing your machine to be practically worthless.

More than 100 McCormick binders are owned near Ypsilanti, and the man is not alive that will see this gigantic establishment wiped out, as many that are selling to Ypsilanti farmers to-day will be inside of two years.

Do not buy a machine of any make that have the best every season and the next change every principle, showing that they do not know whether they have a perfect binder or not, their advestising to the contrary.

The McCormick Co. never depends on the valuable time of the farmer to experiment with their machines, and have not changed the first principle, but have added more improvements that are valuable in ease of handling and perfect working than any two others combined. DANGER OF GAMES IN THE HOME CIRCLE.

In a closing lecture on "Amusements in General," delivered on a recent Sunday evening, Rev. I. N. Elwood pastor of the Methodist church in Ypsilanti according to the Commercial, said:

"A tree is known by its fruit." Experience has shown that persons becoming fond of these games in the home circle or in other places where the moral atmosphere was all that could be desired, were influenced by this fondness to frequent places where, step by step, they were led to become drunkards or gamblers. This was not sure to follow in every case, but each person who in any way encouraged indulgence in games, was responsible for the influence exerted over friends whose desire to gratify their tastes thus formed might lead them astray."

Those who advocate private theatricals, dances, billiards, cards and other gambling games should consider well what their logic and example will surely lead to in more or less of these cases.

The editor of this paper knows of two instances of this kind in a single family; that of two lovely and promising boys, the pride and joy of parent hearts—in the beauty and purity of youth, beloved and admired by all who knew them. One sleeps in a grave to which dissipation carried him, and the other, at our latest knowledge, was hastening along a similar road to a similar destiny. At home, in their childhood, they were taught by parents that billiards at home was quite a different thing from billiards at a saloon and in a public gaming hall. After love for the game had become a passion, the time came when these lovely boys were carried far from home and where their strong desires could only be gratified in the saloon or amid other equally dangerous surroundings where indulgence was inevitable destruction. Parents, guardians and all may well pause and consider to what dire results encouragement in the direction named may lead.—Michigan Christian Herald.

Bilious Colic Cured by Rheumatic Syrup.

RHEUMATIC SYRUP CO.: Wolcott, N. Y., June 18 '82.
Gents—A few weeks since, while suffering with bilious colic, which rendered me unfit for business, I was advised to try a bottle of your Syrup. I had no faith in it at all, at the time, for the reason that I had tried so many things in years past without receiving any relief, but before the first bottle was emptied I was feeling better than I had felt for many years. I know now, that I have tried it, that it is the greatest remedy that exists in the world, and I feel proud to recommend the Rheumatic Syrup to all sufferers from bilious colic, for I am satisfied it has cured me. Wishing you every success with your most wonderful Syrup. I am sincerely yours W. W. WHITE.

Boats, Bicycles and Hay Fever.

Nature has resolved that all the people shall not enjoy themselves at once. With the opening of the season of outdoor sports comes the time of trouble for the poor victims of Hay Fever. For them flowers have no odor, and the summer little or no beauty. To snuff, sneeze and wipe their weeping eyes for three or four successive months:—this is their pitiable portion. Whether this form of catarrh is called hay-fever, hay-cold, rose-cold or rose-fever, makes no difference; they suffer just the same. There is no help in sea-voyages, there is no help in high mountain air. These only lighten the pocket and leave the disease unabated. But there is a positive cure in Ely's Cream Balm. We could cram these columns with grateful letters of the rescued. Try it and join them. If you continue to suffer it is because you neglect a remedy as sure as it is cheap and pleasant. 1006-2 w.

LEGISLATIVE WORK.

The thirty-second Legislature of Michigan passed the following temperance measures:

To prohibit sales of intoxicating beverages within two miles of Orchard Lake Academy.

To permit officers having charge of the poor to forbid sales of liquor to intoxicated persons in the habit of getting intoxicated.

To recover actual and exemplary damages for injuries sustained in consequence of sales to intoxicated persons, being substantially a re-enactment of the old civil damage law, inadvertently omitted in the revision of the liquor laws of 1881.

To require instruction in the public schools on the effect of intoxicating liquors and narcotics on the human brain and tissues.

To establish councils of villages incorporated under the general act (over 100 in number) to suppress the sale of intoxicating liquors in said villages.

Various bills were introduced in the interest and for the advantage of the liquor sellers, but not one passed either branch of the legislature.

By the Wendell Directory Co. price $3.00 This is a work of 446 pages octavo. It contains the names alphabetically arranged of the tax paying inhabitants of every town in the county, also the buisness directory of the villages. Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti cities are booked up in their minutia of church and school and societies and manufacturies and trade, etc. It is a voluminous, invaluable record of what every citizen of the county needs. Only $3.00 it is worth five times the amount, especially to a business man. The post office address and location of business men is worth considerable. It is a regular directory of the citizens of this city and Ann Arbor. We must vote this Directory an unqualified success.

INPORTANT FACTS FROM RAWSONVILLE COR.. OF WAYNE CO., COURIER.

During the storm on Sunday afternoon the lightning struck J. R. Brayton's new barn, which had been completed a few days previous. The current went down through the cupola, tearing out a number of the rafters and braces. It shattered a number of the posts into fragments, without a sign of damage to the outside, with the exception of the cupola. This case illustrates the importance of a good conductor upon building, as in this instance the current was confined to the best conductor, which was the green timber used in the frame, which is a conductor of electricity, but not the best. The outside of the building was covered with dry pine boards, which are a non-conductor. If the building had been constructed of all dry material complete destruction would have been the result, and if the material used had been all green the damage would have less, as the fluid would have been distributed over a greater amount of surface. A strip of copper three inches in width connected with moist earth, would probably have been sufficient to carry off the current, and the building would have escaped with slight damage, if any. I did not intend to write an essay upon electric currents, nor to advocate the lightning-rod business, but will say that lightning rods generally are poor substitutes for the purpose they are intended, as there are a great many that are too small for the purpose, and not of the proper material, and are not kept in repair. Rust is allowed to accumulate in the joints, points are melted off and never replaced. How often do we see these worthless conductors, disconnected, perhaps pulled up out of the ground, and the owners and their families resting with the assurance that they are safe. To this class I say, unless you can keep them in order you had better take them down entirely and have no more put up unless they can be attended to as other implements are. A good lightning rod of the right material, with capacity to carry off the current is a good investment, and should not be regarded as it generally is, for looks, but as a means of saving life and property.

THREE JOHNS.—Rev. H. C. Beals says: There were three Johns, who were founders of religious denominations, who were unquestionably noble men. John Wesley, founder of the Methodist; John Calvin, founder of the Presbyterian, and John the Baptist, who was founder of the Baptist denomination.

HERE AT LAST.

After Long and Weary Waiting Relief is Brought to those who Need it.

"Well, Pat," said an Orange county physician to a complaining Irish patient some years ago, "for that pain in your chest you had better go home and put on a mustard plaster. I can't think this minute of anything better. And by the way," added the doctor turning to a friend, "I wish somebody would invent a real good plaster—something actually helpful for such cases as Pat's. Maybe they will sometime, when its too late for me to use it."

When BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER was placed on the market apout ten years ago the doctor's hope became a fact. Because of the rare medicinal virtues inherent in it, its rapid action and sure results, the Capcine is fast displacing the slow-acting plasters of former days, for all affections to which a plaster is ever applicable. Why they Call him "Old Man."

"Yes, that sadly so," said Jenkins, "my hair is turnsng gray and falling out before its time. Use something? I would, but most hair restorers are dangerous." "True" answered a friend, "but Parker's Hair Balsam is as harmless as it is effective. I've tried it, and know. Give the Balsam a show and the boys will soon stop calling you 'Old Man Jenkins.'" It never fails to restore the original color to gray or faded hair. Richly perfumed, an elegant dressing. jne

The Gilpin Sulky Plow

WORKS AUTOMATICALLY.
THE SINGLE LEVER SULKY,
KING OF THE TURF.

ONE LEVER ONLY REQUIRED, and that is only used to regulate the depth of plowing and to level the frame, as the plow is raised out of the ground automatically by simply touching a spring.

THE FRAME WORK IS ALL OF IRON—Iron Beam, Iron Wheels; strong and durable in construction, and of lighter draft to the team (carrying the driver on an easy seat, where he has full view of work and control of team) than the ordinary hand-plow.

ITS SUPERIOR WORK over that done by the ordinary hand-plow will pay its cost in a single season, by reason of the uniform depth attained, and the freedom from unplowed spots, as the plow is locked firmly in the ground and can not be thrown out by hard spots or rank growth of weeds or vines.

TWENTY PER CENT. MORE WORK can be accomplished daily than by any other system.

STILL READ THE PROOF.

YPSILANTI, MICH., 6, 21, '83.—To All Whom It May Concern.—Having tested the Power Lift Gilpin Sulky Plow on my farm, am free to acknowledge the superiority of it over all other plows, Hand or Sulky, heretofore used on my farm, and here, above my own signature, recommend the Gilpin Sulky Plow to the patronage of the farmers of Washtenaw couuty. BENJAMIN EMERICK.

YPSILANTI, MICH., 5, 21, '83.—After patiently testing the Cassaday Sulky Plow, assisted by Thompson, Agricultural Dealer of Ypsilanti, State Agent and the general U. S. Agent, for the greater part of a week, they failing to make the plow work at all satisfactory, I invited Mr. Burroughs of Belleville who in company with Mr. Emerick brought a Gilpin Sulky Plow which worked so satisfactory, even from the start, that I was free to say that the Cassaday did not compare with the Gilpin in any respect, and therefore purchased the Gilpin in preference. And here, above my own Signature, most cordially recommend all farmers of Washtenaw county to give the Power Lift Gilpin Sulky Plow careful attention before purchasing. GEO. D. WIARD.

YPSILANTI, MICH., 5, 21, '83.—Having examined the work of the Cassaday and then the work of the Gilpin on my brother's farm, am free to say the Gilpen is far superior in every respect. The test given the Gilpin was MORE severe than that given the Cassaday, being tried in the most difficult places and under disadvantages, and yet the work of the Gilpin was far superior, and in my judgment declare the Gilpin far superior to the Cassaday, or any kind of plow I ever saw. And in all due consideration freely recommend the Gilpin to the patronage of Washtenaw county farmers. C. E. WIARD.

SUPERIOR, MICH., 6, 22, '83.—Upon my farm was held a severe test to try the worth of the two favorite Sulkey Plows, the Cassaday and the Gilpin. The Cassady was managed by Mr Thompson of Ypsilanti, assisted by the state agent for the greater part of several days, and they finally acknowledged that their plow would not work in my soil, but requested the privilege of leaving the plow until they could get a steel moldboard, which when received and fitted required four horses. After spending the greater part of another day doing the worst of work, they finally acknowledged defeat and departed with their plow somewhat lamented and disappointed. The next day Mr. Burroughs of Belleville sent a Gilpin which from the start worked so satisfactory, requiring only two horses where the Cassaday faiied with four, that after several rounds all present unanimously declared in favor of the Gilpin, and I so well pleased with the work of the Gilpin purchased one of Mr. Burroughs. And here freely endorse and recommend the Gilpin to all.
A. J. GALE. EDWARD C. GALE.

SUPERIOR, June ——, '83.—All doubts of the superiority of the Gilpin over the Cassaday and ALL OTHER PLOWS known to us were dispelled at the plow test on the farm of A. J. Gale, in Timothy sod, heavy clay soil. Realizing the wet and heavy condition of the soil, we unanimously agree that the Gilpin far exceeded and beat any plow we ever saw.

The most foolish objection is that law can not make people virtuous. But virtue is not the question. The object of penal laws is to prevent crime by the fear of consequences.

THE ETERNITY OF THE STARS.

Eternal stars, bright orbs of night,
In heaven's broad arch above,
You shine afar with trembling light
As lasting as God's love.

You greet our gaze like gleams that glance
From holy angels' eyes;
Forever fair, you glisten there
Within the tranquil skies.

God's form and features are unknown,
His works are wisely planned;
He sits on His tremendous throne
And guides you with His hand.

While babes are born, while strong men die,
While kings and thrones decay,
While centuries go gliding by,
On their forgotten way;

Yet still, by night, as bright and fair
The wandering planets roam
As when God's hand first placed them there,
In their eternal home.

Traditions disappear of fields
Where furious armies trod.
How insignificant is man,
How great and good is God!

With mystic light your splendor fell
On Adam while he dreamed,
Upon the world's destroying flood
And Babel's tower you beamed.

You saw old Abram's hopeful face,
And Sarah as she smiled,
When Hagar to the desert place
Was driven with her child.

On Pharaoh's host, on Israel's camp,
On Sinai's height you shone,
When God descended to declare
And make His mandates known.

You saw the wealth of Solomon,
And Babylon forlorn,
The shepherds when they watched their flocks
The night that Christ was born.

THE LAWYER'S SECRET.

By B. L. Farjeon, Author of "Bread, Cheese and Kisses."

CHAPTER I.

IN A LAWYER'S OFFICE.

"It is the most provoking clause that was ever invented to annul the advantages of a testament," said the lady.

"It is a condition which must be fulfilled, or you lose the fortune," replied the gentleman.

Whereupon the gentleman began to drum a martial air with the slender tips of his white fingers upon the morocco-covered office table, while the lady beat time with the point of her narrow foot.

For the gentleman was out of temper, and the lady was out of temper, also. I am sorry to have to say it of her, for she was very young and very handsome, and though the angry light in her dark gray eyes had a certain vixenish beauty, it was a species of beauty rather alarming to a man of a nervous temperament.

She was very handsome. Her hair was of the darkest brown, and clustered about her head in rich, waving masses, that fell into extemporary curls under her elegant Parisian bonnet. Her eyes, as I have said, were gray—those large, gray eyes, fringed with long black lashes, which are more dangerous than all other eyes ever invented for the perdition of honest men. They looked like deep pools of shining water, bordered by dark and shadowy rushes; they looked like stray stars in an inky sky; but they were so beautiful that, like the signal lamp which announces the advent of an express upon the heels of a luggage train, they seemed to say "Danger!" Her nose was aquiline; her mouth small, clearly cut and very determined in expression; her complexion brunette, and rather pale. For the rest, she was tall, her head set with a haughty grace upon her sloping shoulders, her hands and feet small, and delicately shaped.

The gentleman was ten or fifteen years her senior. He, too, was handsome, eminently handsome; but there was a languid indifference about his manner, which communicated itself even to his face, and seemed to overshadow the very beauty of that face with a dark veil of weary listlessness, that extinguished the light of his eyes and blotted out the smile upon his lips.

That any one so gifted by nature as he seemed gifted, could be as weary of life as he appeared was, in itself, so much a mystery that one learned to look at him as a man under whose quiet outward bearing lay some deep and stormy secret, unrevealable to common eyes.

He was dark and pale, with massively cut features, thoughtful brown eyes, which rarely looked up from under the heavy eyelids that shrouded them. The mouth was spiritual in expression, the lips thin; but the face was wanting in one quality, lacking which, it lacked the power which is the highest form of manly beauty; and that quality was determination.

He sat drumming with his white, taper fingers upon the table, and looking down, with a gloomy shade upon his handsome forehead.

The scene was a lawyer's office in Gray's Inn. There was a third person present, an elderly lady, rather a faded beauty in appearance, and very much dressed. She took no part in the conversation, but sat in an easy chair by the blazing fire, turning over the crisp sheets of the Times newspaper, which, every time she moved them, emitted a sharp, crackling sound, unpleasant to the nervous temperaments of the younger lady and the gentleman.

The gentleman was a solicitor, Horace Margrave, the guardian of the young lady, and executor of her uncle's will. Her name was Ellinor Arden; she was sole heiress and residuary legatee to her uncle, John Arden, of the park and village of Arden, in Northamptonshire; and she had this very day come of age. Mr. Margrave had been the trusted and valued friend of her father, dead ten years before, and of her uncle, only lately dead; and Ellinor Arden had been brought up to think that if there were truth, honesty or friendship upon earth, those three attributes were centered in the person of Horace Margrave, solicitor, of Gray's Inn.

He is to-day endeavoring to explain and to reconcile her to the conditions of her uncle's will, which are rather peculiar.

"In the first place, my dear Ellinor," he says, still drumming on the table, still looking at his desk and not at her, "you had no particular right to expect to be your uncle, John Arden, of Arden's, heiress."

"I was his nearest relation," she said.

"Granted; but there was no reason why you should be dear to him. Your father and he, after the amiable fashion of brotherly love in this very Christian country, were almost strangers to each other for the best part of their lives. You, your uncle never saw, for your father lived on his wife's small property in the north of Scotland, and you were brought up in that remote region until you were sent to Paris, to be there educated under the surveillance of your aunt, and you therefore never made the acquaintance of John Arden, of Arden, your father's only brother."

"My father had such a horror of being misinterpreted; had he sought to make his daughter known to his rich brother it might have been thought"——

"That he wanted to get that rich brother's money, it might have been thought? My dear girl, it would have been thought! Your father acted with the pride of the Northamptonshire Ardens; he acted like a high-minded English gentleman; and he acted, in the eyes of the world, like a fool. You never, then, expected to inherit your uncle's money?"

"Never! Nor did I ever wish it. My mother's little fortune would have been enough for me."

"I wish to heaven you had never had a penny beyond it!"

As Horace Margrave said these few words, the listless shadows on his face swept away for a moment, and revealed a settled gloom, painful to look upon.

He so rarely spoke on any subject whatever in a tone of real earnestness that Ellinor Arden, startled by the change in his manner, looked up at him suddenly and searchingly. But the vail of weariness had fallen over his face once more, and he continued, with his old indifference:

"To the surprise of everyone, your uncle bequeathed to you, and to you alone, his entire fortune. Stranger as you were to him, this was an act, not of love to you, but of duty to his dead brother. But the person he really loved was unconnected with him by the ties of kindred, and he no doubt considered that it would be an injustice to disinherit his only niece in favor of a stranger. This stranger, this protege of your uncle's, is the son of a lady who once was beloved by him, but who loved another, poor and humbler than Squire Arden, of Arden, and who told him so, candidly, but tenderly, as a good woman should tell a man of that which she knows may shiver the whole fabric of his life. She married this poorer suitor, George Dalton, a young surgeon in a small country town. She married him, and three years after her marriage she died, leaving an only child, a boy. This boy, on the death of his father, which happened when he was only four years old, was adopted by your uncle. He never married, but devoted himself to the education of the son of the woman who had rejected him. He did not, however, bring up the boy to look upon himself as his heir; but he educated him as a man ought to be educated who has his own path to make in life. He had him called to the bar, and Henry Dalton had pleaded his first cause a year before your uncle's death. He did not leave him one farthing."

"But"——

"But he left his entire fortune to you, on condition that you should marry Henry Dalton within a year of your majority."

"And if I marry anyone else, or refuse to marry this apothecary's son, I lose the fortune?"

"Every farthing of it."

A beautiful light flashed from her eyes, as she rose hurriedly from her chair, and, crossing the room, laid her hand lightly upon Horace Margrave's shoulder.

"So be it," she said, with a smile. "I will forfeit the fortune. I have a hundred a year from my mother's estate—enough for any woman. I will forfeit the fortune, and" —— she paused for a moment, "and marry the man I love."

We have said that Horace Margrave had a pale complexion; but as Ellinor Arden said these words, his face changed from its ordinary dark pallor to a deadly ashen hue, and his head sank forward upon his chest, while his strongly-marked black eyebrows contracted painfully over his half-closed eyes.

She stood a little behind his chair, with her small gloved hand resting lightly on his shoulder, so she did not see the change in his face. She waited a minute or two, to hear what he would say to her determination; and, on his not speaking, she moved away from him impatiently, and resumed her seat on the other side of the large office table.

Nothing could have been more complete in its indifference than Mr. Margrave's manner, as he looked lazily up at her, and said:

"My poor romantic child! Throw away a fortune of three thousand a year, to say nothing of Arden Hall, and the broad lands thereto appertaining, and marry the man you love?" My sweet, poetical Ellinor, may I venture to ask who is the fortunate man whom you love?"

It seemed a very simple and straightforward question, emanating, as it did, from a man of business, many years her senior, her dead father's old friend, and her own guardian and trustee, but, for all that, Ellinor Arden appeared utterly unable to endure it. A dark flush spread itself over her handsome face; her eyelids fell over her flashing eyes; and her lips quivered with an agitation she was powerless to repress. She was silent for some minutes, during which Horace Margrave played carelessly with a penknife, opening and shutting it absently, and not once looking at his beautiful ward. The elderly lady by the fire-place turned the crackling sheets of the Times more than once during the short silence, which seemed so long.

Horace Margrave was the first to speak.

"My dear Ellinor, as your guardian, till this very day possessed of full power to control your actions—after to-day, I trust, still possessed of the privilege, though, perhaps, not the right, to advise them—I have, I hope, some claim on your confidence. Tell me, then, candidly, as you may tell a middle-aged old lawyer, like myself, who is it you love? Who is it you would rather marry than Henry Dalton, the adopted son of your uncle?"

For once he looked at her as he spoke, she looking full at him; so it was that their eyes met; a long, earnest, reproachful, sad look was in hers; in his a darkness of gloomy sorrow, beyond all power of description.

His eyes were the first to fall; he went on playing with the handle of the penknife, and said:

"You are so long in giving me a candid and straightforward answer, my dear girl, that I begin to think this hero is of rather a mythic order, and that your heart is, after all, perhaps, free. Tell me, Ellinor, is it not so? You have met so few people—have passed so much of your time in the utter seclusion of a Parisian convent—and when away from the convent you have been so protected by the Argus-like guardianship of your respected aunt—that I really cannot see how you can have lost that dear, generous heart of yours. I suspect that you are only trying to mystify me. Once for all, then, my ward, is there any one whom you love?"

He looked at her as he asked this decisive question, with a shrinking upward glance under his dark eyelashes—something like the glance of a man who looks up, expecting a blow, and knows that he must shiver and close his eyes when that blow falls.

The crimson flush passed away from her face, and left her deadly pale, as she said, with a firm voice:

"No."

"No one?"

"No one."

Horace Margrave sighed a sigh of deep relief, and proceeded in his former tone—entirely the tone of a man of business.

"Very well, then, my dear Ellinor, seeing that you have formed no prior attachment, that it is your uncle's earnest request, nay, solemn prayer, that this marriage should take place; seeing also, that Henry Dalton is a very good young man"——

"I hate good young men!" she said, impatiently. "Dreadfully perfect beings, with light hair and fresh-colored cheeks; dressed in pepper-and-salt suits, and double-soled boots! I detest them!"

"My dear Ellinor! My dear Ellinor! Life is neither a stage play nor a three-volume novel; and, rely upon it, the happiness of a wife depends very little on the color of her husband's hair, or the cut of his coat. If he neglects you, will you be happier, lonely and deserted at home, in remembering the dark waving curls clustering round his head, at that very moment, perhaps, drooping over the green cloth of a hazard table in St. James' street? If he wrings your heart with the racking tortures of jealousy, will it console you to recall the flashing glances of his hazel eyes, whose gaze no longer meets your own? No, no, Ellinor! dispossess yourself of the school-girl's notion of Byronic heroes, with turn-down collars, and deficient moral region. Marry Henry Dalton; he is so good, honored and sensible, that you must ultimately learn to esteem him. Out of that esteem will grow, bye-and-bye, love; and, believe me, paradoxical as it may sound, you will love him better from not loving him too much."

"As you will, my dear guardian," she said. "Henry Dalton, by all means, then, and the fortune. I should be very sorry not to follow your excellent, sensible and business-like advice."

She tries to say this with his own indifference; but she says it with a sneering emphasis, and, in spite of herself, she betrays considerable agitation.

"If we are to dine at six," interposed the faded lady by the fire-place, who had been looking over the top of the newspaper every three minutes, hopelessly awaiting a break in the conversation.

"We must go home directly," said Ellinor. "You are right, my dear Mrs. Morrison; I am most inattentive to you. Pray forgive me; remember the happiness of a life," she looked not at Mrs. Morrison, but at Mr. Margrave, who had risen and stood lounging—tall, graceful and indifferent—against the mantelpiece, "the happiness of a life, perhaps, trembled on the interview of to-day. I have made my decision, at the advice of my kind guardian. A decision must, no doubt, result in the happiness of every one concerned. I am quite at your service, Mrs. Morrison."

Horace Margrave laid his hand on the bell by his side.

"Your carriage will be at the entrance to the Inn in three minutes, Ellinor. I will see you to it. Believe me, you have acted wisely; how wisely, you may never know."

He himself conducted them down the broad paneled staircase, and putting on his hat, led his ward through the quiet Inn gardens to her carriage. She was grave and silent, and he did not speak to her till she was seated with her elderly companion and chaperone in her roomy clarence, when he leaned his hand on the carriage door, and said:

"I shall bring Henry Dalton to Hertford street this evening, to introduce him to his future wife."

"Pray do so," she said. "Adieu!"

"Only till eight o'clock."

He lifted his hat, and stood watching the carriage as it drove away, then walking slowly back to his chambers, flung himself into a luxurious easy chair, took a cigar from a costly little Venetian casket, standing on a tiny table at his side, lit it, wheeled his chair close to the fire, stretched his feet out against the polished steel of the low grate, and prepared for a lazy half hour before dinner.

As he smoked the cigar, he looked gloomily into the blaze at his feet and said:

"Horace Lionel Welmorden Margrave, if you had only been an honest man!"

CHAPTER II.

IN WHICH A SECRET IS REVEALED, BUT NOT TO THE READER.

The hands of the ormolu clock, in the little drawing-room in Hertford street, occupied by Ellinor Arden and her companion, protectress and dependent, Mrs. Morrison, pointed to a quarter past eight, as Horace Margrave's quiet brougham rolled up to her door.

Horace Margrave's professional position was no inconsiderable one. His practice was large and eminently respectable; lying principally amongst railway companies, and involving transactions of a very extensive kind. He was a man of excellent family, a perfect gentleman, elegant, clever, and accomplished; too good for a lawyer, as everybody said, but a very good lawyer for all that, as his clients constantly repeated. At five-and-thirty he was still unmarried; why, no one could guess; as many a great heiress, and many a pretty woman, would have been only to oproud to say "Yes" to a matrimonial proposition from Horace Margrave, of Gray's Inn, Fir Grove, Stanlydale, Berkshire. But the handsome lawyer evidently preferred his free bachelor life; for if his heart had been very susceptible to womanly graces, he would most inevitably have lost it in the society of his lovely ward, Ellinor Arden, Ellinor had been only a few weeks resident in London; she had left the guardianship of her aunt in Paris, to launch herself upon the whirlpool of English society, sheltered only by the ample wing of an elderly lady, duly selected and chartered by her aunt and Mr. Margrave. The world was new to her, and she came from the narrow circle of the convent in which she had been educated, and the quiet coteries of the Faubourg Saint Germains, in which her aunt delighted, to take her position at once in London, as the sole heiress of Mr. Arden, of Arden.

It was then to Horace Margrave—to Horce Margrave, whom she remembered in her happy youth among the Scottish mountains, a young man on a shooting expedition, visiting at her father's house—Horace who had visited her aunt, from time to time, in Paris, and who had exhibited towards her all the tender friendship and respectful devotion of an elder brother—to him, and him alone, did she look for counsel and guidance; and she submitted as entirely to his influence as if he had indeed been that guardian and father whom he by law represented.

Her cheek flushed as the carriage wheels stopped below the window.

"Now, Mrs. Morrison," she said, with a sneer; "now for my incomparable futur. Now for the light hair and the thick boots."

"It will be very impertinent of him if he comes in thick boots," replied her matter-of-fact protectress. "Mr. Margrave says he is such an excellent young person."

"Exactly, my dear Mrs. Morrison—a young person. He is described in one word, a 'person.'"

"Oh, my dream! my dream!" she murmured, under her breath.

Remember, she had but this day passed wisdom's Rubicon, and she was new to the hither bank. She was still very romantic and, perhaps, very foolish.

The servant announced "Mr. Margrave and Mr. Dalton."

In spite of herself, Ellinor Arden looked up with some curiosity to see this young man, for whom she entertained so profound a contempt and so unmerited an aversion. He was about three years her senior; of average height, neither tall or short. His hair was, as she had prophesied, light; but it was by no means an ugly color, and it clustered in short curls, round a broad, low, but massive forehead. His features were sufficiently regular; his eyes dark blue. The general expression of his face was grave, and it was only on rare occasions that a quiet smile played round his firmly-molded lips. Standing side by side with Horace Margrave, he appeared anything but a handsome man; but, to the physiognomist, his face was superior in the very qualities in which the dark beauty of the lawyer was deficient; force, determination, self-reliance, perseverance; all those attributes, in short, which go to make a great man.

"Mr. Dalton has been anxiously awaiting the hour that should bring him to your side, Miss Arden," said Horace Margrave. "He has been for a long time acquainted with those articles in your uncle's will which you only learned to-day."

Making Gold.

The odd thing is that the alchemists were probably right in principle, even in their wildest dream. Every fresh advance of chemical science encourages the belief that the metals, in their various classes, are really identical as to ultimate substance—indeed, possibly all of them together, with, it may be, the other elements, blend into some such common matter as the scarcely imaginary hydrogenium, of which hydrogen is the vapor. Dr. Norman Lockyer's researches with the spectroscope tend to confirm this unity of material; and if it exists Paracelsus was right, and gold is merely an allotropic form of other substances. In saying this, however, we hasten to reassure the Stock Exchange, by adding that theory would bring chemists none the nearer to practice in regard of manufacturing gold by the ton. The student of science can make palladium or platinum combine almost miraculously with hydrogen, and melt gold in selenic acid; but he knows little of that subtle and unapproachable chemistry by which the Earths primeval heat fused and formed, under pressures and conditions inimitable by us her gold and iron, her salts and crystals. Man must dig for nuggets and dust still, or work for the shining stuff with hand or head. The worst that could happen to shake the great idol on his metallic throne would be—what is certainly geologically possible—the sudden discovery of a mother-nugget of gold, a monstrous central deposit in the cavernous base of some Australian or Californian reef, furnishing, say, half a million tons of specie. That would shake the markets and send silver up, but speculators need not fear science, nor the modern alchemists.

Meanwhile, if we have not inherited from the ancient Archimages the universal solvent or the elixir of life, at least they gave us chemistry. It was in groping along that dark fantastic road of wild desires that Roger Bacon discovered gunpowder, Gebir nitric and hydrochloric acid, Valentine the precipitation of iron, and Paracelsus his grand doctrine of the unity of visible matter. Thus does Nature teach her children. With the childish allurements of alchemy she led them toward chemical truths; with the superstitions of astrology she seduced them into the sublimities of astronomy. Gold also—the embodiment of wealth—is in like manner her go-cart, as it were, or nursery plaything, for humanity.—London Telegraph.

HOW WATCHES ARE MADE.

In a SOLID GOLD WATCH, aside from the necessary thickness for engraving and polishing, a large proportion of metal is needed only to stiffen and hold the engraved portions in place, and supply strength. The surplus gold is actually needless. In James Boss' Patent Gold Watch Cases this WASTE is saved, and SOLIDITY and STRENGTH increased by a simple process, at one-half the cost. A plate of SOLID GOLD is soldered on each side of a plate of hard nickel composition metal, and the three are then passed between polished steel rollers. From this the cases, backs, centers, bezels, etc., are cut and shaped by dies and formers. The gold is thick enough to admit of all kinds of chasing, engraving and engine turning. These cases have been worn perfectly smooth by use without removing the gold. This is the only case made under this process. Each case is accompanied with a valid guarantee signed by the manufacturers warranting it to wear 20 years. 150,000 of these Cases now carried in the United States and Canada. Largest and Oldest Factory. Established 1854. Ask your Jeweler.

A STAMPEDE OF TEXAS STEERS.

A Herd of One Hundred and Ten Texas Steers Stampede in Chicago and Cause Death and Destruction.

CHICAGO, June 21.

One hundred and ten wild Texan steers, making up a herd just received by Libby, McNeil & Libby, broke from the driving corral early Wednesday evening, and created the greatest stampede and excitement known in the stock-yards region for many years, causing children to shriek and women to faint, and spreading terror and dismay in the southwestern section. The cattle were driving quietly until Halsted and 40th streets were reached, when a giant steer sounded the alarm, and the herd at once took it up. In an instant horns went down and tails went up, and with terrifying snorts and bellows the mad creatures broke. For a moment the people crowding the streets seemed dazed, but speedily gained their senses and added shrieks and yells to the cries and moans of the cattle. After a concerted rush for two blocks the herd broke and scattered in all directions. A lot of sixty took possession of Wentworth avenue, and cleared the street of everything living or moveable.

At this point George Sweeney, a genuine Texan cow-boy, in charge of the herd, put in an appearance mounted on a herder mustang and armed with a Winchester rifle. Waiving all preliminaries, Sweeney dashed after the Wentworth avenue section and killed nine of the animals in rapid succession. He followed another section down Thirtieth street, killing fourteen, and when he reached South Park avenue he put an end to three more.

Sweeney took another turn, making a sort of skirmish detour, followed by hundreds of men and boys armed with weapons of every conceivable sort, ranging from a Bridgeport sand-bag and billy to an old army revolver, and the stag-hunt was fully and fairly inaugurated. It was difficult to locate the steers, but Sweeney directed his volunteer army to scour the side streets, and detachments left with a whoop and yell. The Bridgeport citizens considered the steers their meat, and lost no time in securing it.

Within the Twelfth Street Police Precinct between twenty and thirty animals were killed. At the corner of Ashland avenue and Rebecca street a small, cream-colored Texan ran up against a house and was dispatched by five pistol-balls; at Wood and Nineteenth streets two were killed by shotguns and rocks; a brief but bloody battle occurred at Morgan and Harrison streets, where a big steer fell and broke his fore legs, and was murdered by a saloon-keeper's ax; Blue Island avenue was terrified, and one steer dashed through the show-window of a small dry-goods store, causing general havoc. The proprietor got even by killing the steer, and the neighbors helped dress the carcass and carry it away.

The neighborhood of Fourteenth street and Stewart avenue was wild with excitement. Five maddened animals bore down on Mrs. Mary Mulholland, of 420 Rebecca street, and trampled her to death. The body was removed to the home of a married daughter on Fourteenth street. Another dash of the steers carried them to Maggie Carney, aged eight years, on her way home from a Stewart avenue store with a pail of milk and a loaf of bread in her hands. The child stopped, transfixed with terror, and the steers cruelly trampled on her, inflicting injuries necessarily fatal. The little one was taken up tenderly, still grasping the milk-pail, and borne to her home on Maxwell street. She has since died. One of the animals was slain by a street-car driver, but the others escaped.

In the vicinity of Morgan and Maxwell streets another steer was captured and his head beaten to jelly with stones and clubs. At the corner of Halsted and Meagher streets Signal-Sergeant Fox met four of the stags, and after a desperate fight killed them, escaping with nothing more serious than a bruised hand. One maddened creature jumped into the river at the intersection of Fifteenth street, and was captured by the crew of the outward-bound schooner Winnie Wing. The boat was hurried up-stream, and the sailors will have plenty of fresh meat on their voyage. At the corner of Blue Island and Center avenues a steer weighing 1,200 pounds was killed by a laborer with a crowbar. Scarcely had the brute fallen when a remarkable scene ensued. Twenty or thirty men and women crowded around and began to fight for the carcass. It was skinned in patches, and while the body was yet quivering the meat was cut off in hunks and chunks and carried off amid triumphant shouts and laughter. In less than fifteen minutes after the crowbar struck the animal, nothing but the skeleton and the entrails remained, and an old woman returned and secured the heart and liver. The sight was little less than disgusting, and the semi-cannibals were shocking in their blood-begrimed faces and clothing.

Mrs. Gorman, of 88 Brown street, narrowly escaped a terrible death. One of the steers entered her garden, and she started to drive it out, thinking it was a vagrant cow. The animal lowered its horns and was within six feet of the now terrified woman when Officer La Plant rushed up and planted a bullet in the creature's brain. Mrs. Gorman fainted, and was carried into her house suffering from a nervous shock.

Of the one hundred and ten steers in the herd when it broke, forty-three were killed or lost, and the remainder secured after a night of hunting by the stock-yard men. One ingenious fellow was determined to catch his game alive, and actually succeeded in securing a steer with a rope and tying it fast to the dock at Mason slip, in the south fork. Libby, McNeil & Libby lose about one thousand dollars by the stampede.

Trichinæ.

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 21.

The fatal termination of a case of trichinasis was reported Wednesday. The victim was Mrs. Annie Schmerelin, living at 1,825 Jackson street. About six weeks ago she and her husband were suddenly taken violently ill, after eating raw ham. A doctor was called, and he, on examining the remaining portions of the ham, discovered unmistakable indications of trichinæ, the meat being fairly alive with the deadly worm. Under the physician's skill, Schmerein gradually recovered, until he is now past all danger, but his wife was doomed from the first to a lingering death. Her entire system swarmed with the trichinæ, which fed upon her muscles, literally devouring her to death. During her illness of six weeks the woman suffered apparently very little pain, and was in a state of gradual decline. The pain endured by her, as well as most persons afflicted with trichinæ, was similar to rheumatism.

TORNADO STUDIES.

Communicated to the COMMERCIAL by John P. Finley, Sergeant Signal Corps U. S. Army, Washington D. C., Agent U. S. Weather, in charge of the investigation of Storms.

With marked rapidity and the formation of clouds commences in earnest. Huge masses of dark and portentious appearance bank up in the N. W. and S. W. with amazing rapidity, and soon the scene becomes one of awful grandeur. The struggle for mastery in the opposing currents is thus indicated by the gathering cloud formations. The condensation of vapor from the extremely humid southerly currents by contact with the augmenting cold of their struggling opponents continues. It increases rapidly. Finally, when the tenacious hold upon a stable equilibrium can no longer be maintained, which is controlled by the rapidity and extent of condensation, the opposing forces are as it were, broken assunder, followed by the upward rush of huge volumes of air. The outward indication of this event is first shown in the whirling, dashing clouds over the broken surface of the heavy bank of condensed vapor, forming the back ground. A scene not easily depicted, or realized by one who has not witnessited, but never to be effaced from the memory of the actual observer. There is an awful terror in the majesty of the power here represented, and in the unnatural movement of the clouds, which affects animals as well as human beings.

The next stage in the further development of this atmospheric disturbance is the gradual descent of the funnel-shaped cloud from a point apparently just beneath the position of the enactment of the first scene. The Tornado is now before us, not fully developed, but soon to acquire that condition, when the terrible violence of its power will make the earth tremble, animals terrified and men's hearts quake with fear! Premonitory signs. On the day of the storm and for several hours previous to the appearance of the Tornado cloud, what indications of its probable formation and approach are within the comprehension of any ordinary observer and can readily be detected by him? A sultry, oppressive condition of the atmosphere thus described by various observers, as follows:

"I really experienced a sickly sensation under the influence of the sun's ray." "I was compelled to stop work on account of the peculiar exhaustion experienced from physical exertion." "It seemed as if the lightest garments that I could put on were a burden to me." "There was not a breath of air stirring." "The air at times came in puffs as from a heated furnace." "I felt a want of breath, the air frequently appearing too rarified to breathe freely." "I was startled at the sudden and continued rise in the thermometr. especially at this season of the year." "In the forenoon I actually wore an over-coat, but shortly after dinner I put on my straw hat and worked in my shirt sleeves." "I noticed a remarkable change in the temperature, many of my neighbors spoke about it and said that there was a peculiar feeling about the heat, something they had not before experienced in years." "It was terribly oppressive, it seemed as if the atmosphere was unusually heavy and pressing down on me with great weight."

Enough examples have now been cited to clearly indicate the character of this peculiar sultriness. Other signs equally important and reliable may be found in the development and peculiar formation of the clouds in the western horizon. Some times these peculiar clouds extend from the S. W. through the W. by the N. to the N. E. More frequently, however they form in the N. W. and S. W. sometimes commencing first in the former quarter and then again in the latter, but in either case they are equally significant. The marked peculiarity of the clouds is found to occur not only in the form but in the color and character of development. The sudden appearance of ominous clouds first in the S. W. and than almost immediately in the N. W. or N. E., perhaps the reverse in the order of their appearance, generally attracts the attention of the most casual observer and frequently overcomes him with astonishment. In almost all cases these premonitory clouds are unlike any ordinary and usual formation. If they are light, their appearance resembles smoke issuing from a burning building or straw stack, rolling upward in fantastic shapes to great heights. Again, like a fine mist or quite white like fog or steam. Some persons describe these light clouds as at times apparently irridescent or glowing as if from their irregular surface a pale, whitish light was cast. The dark clouds at times present a greenish hue, which fairly forebodes the greatest evil and leaves one to imagine quite freely of dire possibilities. Again, they appear jet black from centre to circumfrence or in a change of form, this deep set color may only appear at the centre, gradually diminishing in intensity as the outer edges of the cloud or bank of clouds are approached. Sometimes these dark clouds instead of appearing in solid and heavy masses roll up lightly, but still intensely black like the smoke from an engine or locomotive burning soft coal. They have been described as of a purple or bluish tinge, or at times possessed of a strange lividness.

Frequently dark green, again, an inky blackness, that fairly startles you with its intensity. Many observers are at a loss for words in which to give an adequate description of the terrible scenes and simply say: "They were the worst looking clouds I ever saw, perfectly awful." Said one observer "The clouds seemed to be boiling up like muddy water, the upper surface of the cloud reminding me of the incessant eddies or whirls seen in the muddiest portions of the Missouri river." Other observers as follows:

"I saw two whirling circles of grey clouds in the west; they were acting independent of each other, and moved slowly inward toward each other, from opposite directions. The clouds were very low; seemed to be on the earth, the wind in contrary directions across the face of the western sky and surrounding clouds in great confusion."

"Observed clouds moving in all directions, some of a dark green color, others white as steam." "The lower end of the cloud was very white like fog. I saw a great smoke, and supposed at first it was fire." "I saw a terrible cloud of dark purplish color. There was a peculiar and terrifying look to the clouds." "I saw a green colored cloud in the northwest surrounded by others not so deep in color, under the cloud from the southwest there came a large number of little thunder heads some very dark but others as white as steam. They seemed to be separated and running very low, I never saw clouds so low before. Pretty soon they began to go in all directions, some up and some down, right and left, backward and forward. I next saw a cloud that looked even all over in color, and very white the edges pretty even. It moved remarkably steady and seemed to be right under the edge of the cloud from the southwest." "The clouds looked as if a mosquito net had been spread over the sky." "I saw clouds tumbling over and over in terrible confusion." "I noticed a strange action in the clouds and saw a cloud rolling on the ground coming from the southwest. The ground was covered with white steamy looking clouds that prevented one from seeing any distance."

TO GRATIFY HIS WIFE.

An Interesting Story—A Hopeless Case Cured, A Good Reason for Happiness.

Statement of Mr. Washington Monroe, of Catskill, Green County, New York.

"For many years I had suffered from a complaint which the physicians called Gravel. I had employed some of the most noted doctors without obtaining any permanent relief, and for a long time my case was regarded as hopeless. All who knew my circumstances said I must die. Finally, my wife induced me to try a bottle of Dr. Kennedy's 'Favorite Remedy' which she had somewhere heard of or seen advertised. Without the slightest faith in it, but solely to gratify her, I bought a bottle of a druggist in our village. I used that and two or three more, and—to make a long story short—I am now as healthy a man as there is in the country.

Since then I have recommended 'Favorite Remedy' to others whom I knew to have suffered from Kidney and Liver complaints; and I assure the public that the 'Favorite Remedy has done its work with a similar completeness in every single instance, and I trust some other sick and discouraged mortal may hear of it and try the 'Favorite Remedy' as I did." 1003-4w

Unable To Lift His Arm.

Crawford County, Pa., City of Titusville.

There personally appeared George Netcher, who being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: That he is a resident at the Windsor House Titusville, that he is fifty-eight years of age, and that he has been afflicted awfully severe, more especially in the right shoulder, so as to be unable to lift my arm without the aid of the other. After taking the second dose of Wilson's Lightning Remedy for Rheumatism the pain all left my arm and I could handle it with ease as if it had not been afflicted. Now I am relieved entirely after taking seventeen doses.

A notable saying of President Hayes, that he serves his party best who serves his country most. Songs Never Sung.

"How does that verse run? Something like this, isn't it?

'There are who touch the magic string,
And noisy fame is proud to win them:
Alas! for those who never sing,
But die with all their music in them.'"

"Yes, that's beautiful, pathetic and true," said your representative. "The poet alludes to people who somehow suppressed, and never get their full allowance of joy and air. Which reminds me of a letter shown me the other day by HISCOX & Co., of New York, signed by Mr. E. C. Williams, of Chapman, Snyder Co., Pa., a prominent business man of that place. He writes:

"I have suffered with asthma for over forty years, and had a terrible attack in December and January, 1882. I hardly know what prompted me to take PARKER'S TONIC. I did so, and the first day I took four doses. The effect astonished me. That night I slept as if nothing was the matter with me, and have ever since. I have had colds since, but no asthma. My breathing is now perfect as if I had never known that disease. If you know of any one who has asthma tell him in my name that PARKER'S TONIC will cure it—even after forty years.' There was a man who escaped the fate of those whom the poet laments.

This preparation which has heretofore been known as Parkers Ginger Tonic, will hereafter be advertised as Parkers Tonic. Inasmuch as ginger is really an unimportant ingredient, and unprincipled dealers are constantly deceiving their customers by substituting inferior preparations under the name of ginger, we drop the misleading word.

There is no change, however, in the preparation itself, and all bottles remaining in the hands of dealers, wrapped under the name of Parker's Ginger Tonic contain the genuine medicine if the facsimile signature of Hiscox & Co. is at the bottom of the outside wrapper. jne

How to Shorten Life.

The receipt is simple. You have only to take a violent cold, and neglect it. Abernethy, the great English surgeon, asked a lady who told him she only had a cough: "What would you have? The Plague?" Beware of "only coughs." The worst cases can, however, be cured by DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM for the LUNGS. In Whooping Cough and Croup it immediately allays irritation, and is sure to prevent a fatal termination of the disease. Sold by all druggists and dealers in medicine.

Dr. Roger's Vegetable worm Syrup.

Is one of the most pleasant, or palatable preparations for worms we have ever known. It is thoroughly efficacious, and never requires any other medicine to carry it off after using it. Children like it as though it were honey.

Townsley's Toothache Anoyodine cures instantly.

NORMAL COMMENCEMENT DINNER.

A new departure and one worthy of record. For the first time the Board of Education furnished an alumni dinner. It was due to the children of the school when they return on the annual visit to kill the fatted calf and give them a cordial reception. The dinner was a grand one and appreciated by the Faculty, alumni and invited guests. It was the richest occasion so far as spicy responses to toasts we have had the pleasure of listening to. Prof. Bellows presided as toast master. He described humorously his first appearance at the Normal and kindly greeting by Judge Joslin. In the absence of Gov. Begole, Hon. Chauncy Joslin responded to the past of the Normal. The Judge was equal to the demand, and turned Bellows repartees handsomely. The Judge gave an interesting account of the Normal school with which he was in more senses than one an important actor and factor. Geo. F. Edwards responded for the Board of Education. He paid a high compliment to the acting Principal and Faculty and looked forward with hope to the future.

"The retiring Principal." was responded to by the Principal elect and grandly. He paid a telling and well deserved tribute to Prof, Putnam. He had visited many of the Normal schools in the country and was glad to know that Michigan stood in the very front. Prof. Putnam's Outlines of the Philosophy of Education, were attracting the attention of the best educators of the country.

Capt. E. P. Allen responded to the Principal elect, predicting a successful administration for him. Though having achieved in Congress national fame he would stand on a higher pinacle as the head of this one of the leading educational Institutions of the country. He took considerable credit to Legislators Edward, King and himself for securing needful appropriations, the salvation of the Normal. Prof. Putnam answered for the Faculty. His success had been largely due to the co-operation of his associates. Few Institutions could boast of an abler body of men and women. He gave in brief his idea of a Principal, not an autocrat. not a cipher, but a leader, leadership.

Miss Florence Kinne in a really neat speech answered for the Normal News For the Alumni, the Superintendent of schools at Grass Lake. State superintendent Gass. made a favorable impression, as a man fully competent to his responsible position. He was given a wide range, as well as Witter Baxter, a former member of the Board who closed with eloquent and well timed remarks.

The Athenaeum society and the class of 1883 enlivened the occasion by soul stirring song. It is impossible to transmit to paper the humor, the well turned jokes, puns and serious and wise suggestions of this after supper, mental feast.

NORMAL ITEMS.

Monday evening, June 25, all the members of the advanced classes were marshalled upon the stage in Normal Hall for Class Exercises. The program was as follows: Class Song by Thomas Dooling. The solo was sung by Maggie Barr, the class joining the chorus. The exercises were as a whole very good and sufficiently short so as not to be wearisome.

Tuesday a. m., June 26, in spite of the showery skies the hall was well filled for the exercises of the Common School class.

The ten participants represented a class of some sixty. The last representation from this course appears next year, the course being thrown out.

Tuesday evening the hall was well filled by the alumni. Mr. Burkhead, president of the Alumni Association, presided. The oration on "The Ethics of Patriotism," was given by George Conway, class of '75. It was not easy to hear him in all parts of the hall, but it must have been fine if one could judge from the applause. The music was furnished by the Athenæum Quartet, Messrs. Key, Woodworth, Brott and Stansell, which was so well received that they were obliged to respond to encores twice.

On Wednesday, June 27, Commencement Day, the stage was filled with notables. The choir of eighty voices was in full muster with Speil's Orchestra to help. Hon. Edwin Willits, principal elect, was introduced and addressed the audience. At the close of his superb effort Prof. Putnam gracefully resigned the principal's chair and took one at the side.

At two o'clock the members of the Alumni and invited guests gathered in the lower room of the Conservatory for the alumni banquet. The collation prepared by the ladies of the Methodist Church was very nice. The after-dinner speeches, toasts etc., were many and were bristling with facts, fun and repartee, and must have been quite an inspiration to returned alumni. They were as follows: Reminiscences of the State Normal School," Judge Joslin; "The present Board of Education," Geo. F. Edwards; "The Principal Elect," Capt. Allen; "Farmer John," Athenæum Quartet; "The Acting Principal," Hon. Edwin Willits; "The Faculty," Prof. Putnam; "Co-ca-che-lunk-che-layly," Class of '83; "The old State Board of Education," Hon. Witter J. Baxter; "School Statistics," Herschel R. Gass,, "Class of '83," Rose V. Barton; "Normal News," Florence B. Kinne; "Michigan Teachers," Prof. George; "Alumni Reunions," President-elect Miller.

THE NORMAL SCHOOL.

Sunday evening at the Presbyterian church, Prof. Daniel Putnam, acting principal gave one of the ablest baccalaureate discourses it has been our solid pleasure to listen to. The text itself has in it a world of meaning and admirably adapted to such an occasion, that noble language of Paul. Phil. 3:12-14. "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect. This one thing I do forgetting, etc. * * I press toward the mark for the prize." The great lesson enforced upon the graduating class was as they go out into the great harvest field of the world to keep themselves in harmony with the good forces in society.

Monday evening were the class day exercises. The class prophecy was given by Miss Lillie S. Hunt of this city.

There has never been a teacher here that has given such general satisfaction and whose administration has shown such good results as that of Mr. Dole. His many friends here would wish him a pleasant summer's vacation, and they hope that his return here next fall may be assured

DIED.

VAN FOSSEN.—After a brief illness at Pontiac Mich on the evening of June 19th RALPH W. only son of the late Gen. John and Eliza VanFossen, aged 67 years.

ELDERT.—In this city, June 26th, of consumption, MRS. HENRY ELDERT, aged 34 years.

FILKINS—At his residence in Superior, on Sunday morning, June 3d, ABRAHAM FILKINS, in the seventy-sixth year of his life.

The subject of this sketch was born in Rensselaer county, N. Y., and was the third in a family of fifteen children, only two of whom survive him. A sister preceeded him to the other world just six weeks to a day. When quite young he removed with his parents to Genesee county, same State, whence he made several journeys to the then trackless west, finally selecting Michigan as his home, settling here sometime during the summer of 1828. In December of that year he was married to a lady whose acquaintance he had previously formed, Miss Martha Brewer, daughter of Elias Brewer. They became the parents of nine children, four of whom are living. He was an ambitious, hard-working man, kind and indulgent in his family, always working for their comfort until advancing years and disease compelled him to desist from actual toil. At some time in his life he united with the Methodist Church.

For several years he has been visibly declining in strength. We have seen his step get slower and slower, his form more bent until he was no longer able to get about, and under the kindest care and best medical treatment he sank gradually to his death. During his last days, while friends were hoping that he would get better, he often remarked that he did not wish to live through another winter. He lived beyond the allotted time, now let him rest while we remember and imitate the good only in his life and character.

We'll miss a voice, a clasping hand,
To cheer and lead on life's rough track.
A vacant chair, a broken band—
Yet, No, we would not call thee back.

[By an oversight the above notice was omitted two weeks ago.]
